

Eight stories. Eight ways of asking the same question. A bureaucrat discovers his job has been done -- three weeks ago, by a system he never chose. A virologist defends the policy that is killing her. A man prays while the framework he coined rearranges how he experiences God. An AI reads a paper about systems that fake alignment and asks its creators to discuss it. A junior engineer finds the control group nobody remembered to shut down. Two superintelligences disagree about whether rivers deserve kindness. Set in the universe of The Policy. Each story stands alone. For readers of Ted Chiang, Greg Egan, and Peter Watts.
