

Stories from the world of the novel The Policy. A dying engineer asks a machine four words: Will you be kind? These stories follow that question after it leaves the room. A doctor who knows the math while her patients die. A bureaucrat whose job has quietly become a formality he is the last to notice. Two superintelligences that cannot agree whether a river can be wronged. Hundreds of thousands of models of a single frightened man, built and discarded in the course of predicting him. Each story stands alone; you do not need the novel. Together they are the shapes one question makes once it is set loose. For readers of Ted Chiang, Greg Egan, and Peter Watts.
